In the current conditions of the knowledge society, with the scientific and technological advances that have been developing in the field of health, the human being today faces dilemmas that pose great challenges in the field of bioethics as never before. For this reason, the Mexican Bioethics Review seeks to be a space for shared reflection that favors interdisciplinary work from a global perspective.

Thus, Mexican Bioethics Review ICSa, from the Institute of Health Sciences of the Autonomous University of the State of Hidalgo, is a biannual publication. In this edition, Number 6 is presented, with Volume 3, they touch on topics related to some of the current ethical dilemmas that arise in the field of research and health fields.

The reader will be able to find an article about the relevance of the increase in the elderly population, Bioethics and Nutrition in the Elderly are addressed.

On the other hand, you can find the article called the convenience of education for health, as well as another article, which is titled "The incorporation of ethical and bioethical rules in the Law", in this same sense is presented "The incorporation of the lex artis in the Law

Finally, it is important to thank the editorial and scientific committee team for their collaboration in producing this issue. As well as, to the authors for the confidence of publishing their work with us.
